“Ethel plays their repertoire vigorously and cultivates a persona closer to that of a rock band than of a conventional string quartet.”
– The New York Times

BERKELEY, January 20, 2005 – The new-music band, a.k.a. string quartet, Ethel brings its one-of-a-kind blend of rock, jazz and classical music to Hertz Hall on Sunday, February 27 at 3 p.m. Since the group’s appearance on the musical scene in 1998, Ralph Farris (viola), Dorothy Lawson (cello), Todd Reynolds (violin) and Mary Rowell (violin) have created an exciting and rare combination of tastes and talents that developed from each member’s unique experiences in the music world. A “mighty amplified force” that has “style, breadth, power, chops and rock ‘n’ roll spirit,” (Andante.com), Ethel has been hailed by The New York Times as “extraordinarily skilled, passionate musicians.” A free Sightlines discussion with the artists will be held immediately following the concert.

ETHEL

Before becoming Ethel, Ralph Farris, Dorothy Lawson, Todd Reynolds and Mary Rowell each had busy freelance careers in and outside of New York City. In January of 1998 they found themselves in a quartet as a result of a typical freelance musical event. It became clear to these four passionate and skilled musicians that this quartet was not just a one-night stand. “It felt like a group of friends forming a band,” explains Ms. Rowell (The New York Times). They realized they could create a performance experience that encompassed all of their musical interests without compromise. “There will always be Bach, Beethoven and Mozart,” Mr. Lawson explains, “We love that music, but we don’t restrict what we expose ourselves to or participate in” (Inside Arts, 2003). Originally called Hazardous Waste, they changed the name to Ethel after seeing the film Shakespeare in Love where young William Shakespeare considers revising the name of his new play “Romeo and Ethel, the Pirate’s Daughter.” From the beginning the group began soliciting work from composer friends in New York’s new-music scene including John King, Phil Kline, Evan Ziporyn and Todd Reynolds himself. “Ethel is a composer’s dream,” explains Ziporyn, “doing everything I ask and making it sound even better than I imagined.”

Members of Ethel have performed and/or recorded with Bang On A Can, the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center, the Orpheus Chamber Orchestra, the New York Chamber Symphony, the Steve Reich Ensemble and with artists Sheryl Crow, Roger Daltrey, Reba McEntire and Yo-Yo Ma, among many others. Ethel’s penchant for improvisation and theater is instrumental to its group philosophy and aesthetic. These serious musicians, in fact, consider show-biz as part of their artistic arsenal. One of the band’s most distinctive programming options uses improvisation to weave composed pieces together, creating a seamless, flowing concert experience. With Ethel’s irreverence and panache, listeners are enveloped by the sounds of amplified strings as they are taken on an intense ride of arena-rock proportions.

In 2002, Ethel was awarded a DNA grant from Arts International and performed at the Haus Kulture der Welt in Berlin to commemorate 9/11. They have been featured in performances at the Kimmel Center in Pennsylvania, Bard College, The Library of Congress, MIT, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute and Suffolk County Community College in New York, and around New York City at The Cutting Room, the Flea Theater, Joe’s Pub, Brooklyn’s Southpaw and Galapagos Art Space. Additionally, Ethel performed in New York City at Columbia University’s Miller Theater for a three-concert series of the complete string quartets of Julia Wolfe and John Zorn, at Lincoln Center for its debut at the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center, on the CMA Marathon at Symphony Space, and in recital at the Whitney Museum of American Art at Altria (NY).

Festival performances included Lincoln Center Out of Doors, BAM’s Next Wave, the String Summit at The Kitchen, Great Day in New York at Merkin Hall, The Festival Dancing in Your Head in Minnesota, and Bang On A Can Marathons in New York and Hamburg, Germany.

Ethel’s 2004-2005 season highlights include the Cantaloupe Music release of its second CD – Ethel’s self-named debut album was released on Cantaloupe Records in 2003; the premiere of Mary Ellen Childs’ and Tony Brown’s “Dream House” at the Southern Theater in Minnesota; the premiere of a new work by Vijay Iyer at Merkin Hall; their Kennedy Center debut; first-time performances in Houston, Berkeley, Nashville, San Antonio, Seattle, Portland, Austin and Cleveland among others; plus a 25-city US tour opening for Joe Jackson and Todd Rundgren.
