Igor Stravinsky (1882–1971)

Suite Italienne for Cello and Piano

Late in 1930, Willy Strecker, co-owner and director of the prestigious German publishing house of Schott, suggested to Igor Stravinsky that a violin concerto might make a welcome addition to the catalog of his music, and told the composer that the violinist Samuel Dushkin was willing to offer technical advice for the project. Stravinsky was, however, somewhat reluctant to accept the proposal because of his lack of confidence in writing for the violin as a solo instrument and his concern that Dushkin might be one of those performers interested only in “immediate triumphs...[through] special effects, whose preoccupation naturally influences their taste, their choice of music, and their manner of treating the piece selected.” He agreed to meet the young violinist, however, and their first encounter proved to be warm and friendly. Stravinsky recalled that he found in his new colleague, “besides his remarkable gifts as a born violinist, a musical culture, a delicate understanding, and—in the exercise of his profession—an abnegation of self-interest that is very rare.” Their initial contact blossomed into sincere friendship, and the Violin Concerto was composed eagerly during the first months of 1931.

So successful was the premiere of the new Concerto on October 23, 1931, in Berlin (the composer conducted) that Stravinsky and Dushkin received invitations to present the piece all over Europe, from Florence to London to Madrid. This resulting series of concerts made Stravinsky realize, however, that a good performance of the Concerto demanded both a first-rate orchestra and an adequate number of rehearsals, circumstances which could not be taken for granted in all cities, so for a subsequent tour with Dushkin he devised several recital pieces for violin and piano that would enable them to play almost anywhere without difficulty. The centerpiece of the tour program was the Duo Concertant of 1931–1932, but to round out the concert, together they arranged excerpts from some of his ballets, including The Firebird, The Fairy's Kiss, Petrushka, and The Nightingale. (Dushkin extracted the violin parts from the orchestral scores; Stravinsky made the piano arrangements.) The best known of this set of transcriptions is the Suite Italienne, derived from Stravinsky’s luminous score for Pulcinella, the 1920 ballet based on works of Giovanni Battista Pergolesi (1710–1736), a musical meteor who flashed briefly across the Italian artistic firmament during the early years of the 18th century and created several important instrumental and operatic pieces that laid the foundations of the Classical style. The ballet became a success, and its style led the way to a new attitude about the relationship between 20th-century music and that of earlier eras, a trend that became known as “Neo-Classicism.” In 1922, Stravinsky extracted an orchestral suite from Pulcinella. Three years later, he arranged five of its numbers for violin and piano, and with the help of the virtuoso Gregor Piatigorsky in 1932, he transcribed four of the same movements for cello and piano; the following year, Stravinsky reworked the 1925 violin suite with Dushkin’s advice, added a sixth movement (the Scherzino), and issued it as the Suite Italienne.

The idea for Pulcinella originated with Serge Diaghilev, the legendary impresario of Ballet Russe, who suggested the music of Pergolesi to Stravinsky. The composer, perhaps with Diaghilev’s help, selected from Pergolesi’s works several movements from the trio sonatas and arias from two operas. To these he added several musical bits by other composers. In general, he kept the bass lines and melodies of his models intact, but added to them his own spicier harmonies and invigorating rhythmic fillips. Stravinsky’s role in Pulcinella, however, was far more than that of simply transcriber or arranger. He not only created a cogent work of art from a wide variety of previously unrelated pieces, but he also gave a new perspective to both his own and Pergolesi’s music. “Pulcinella,” he recalled in Dialogues and a Diary, “was my discovery of the past—but it was a look in the mirror, too.”

With this music, Stravinsky found a manner in which to apply earlier styles and techniques to his own compositional needs, a discovery that was to provide the inspiration for his works for the next 30 years. “Music about music” is Eric Salzman’s perfect phrase describing the essence of Stravinsky’s aesthetic during the ensuing three decades.

The plot of Pulcinella was based on an 18th-century manuscript of commedia dell’arte plays that Diaghilev discovered in Naples. Stravinsky provided the following synopsis: “All the local girls are in love with Pulcinella; but the young men to whom they are betrothed are mad with jealousy and plot to kill him. The minute they think they have succeeded, they borrow costumes resembling Pulcinella’s to present themselves to their sweethearts in disguise. But Pulcinella—cunning fellow!—had changed places with a double, who pretends to succumb to their blows. The real Pulcinella, disguised as a magician, now resuscitates his double. At the very moment when the young men, thinking they are rid of their rival, come to claim their sweethearts, Pulcinella appears and arranges all the marriages. He himself weds Pimpinella, receiving the blessing of the double, who in his turn has assumed the magician’s mantle.” Though the Suite Italienne is a sort of vest-pocket version of the original ballet, it fully captures the wit, insouciance, and joie de vivre that place this music among the most delicious of all Stravinsky’s creations.

Heitor Villa-Lobos (1887–1959)

Chôros No. 5, “Alma Brasileira”

Composed in 1925.

Heitor Villa-Lobos, Brazil’s greatest composer, had little formal training. He learned the cello from his father and earned a living as a young man playing with popular bands, from which he derived much of his musical background. From his earliest years, Villa-Lobos was enthralled with the indigenous songs and dances of his native land, and he made several trips into the Brazilian interior to study the native music and ceremonies. Beginning with his earliest works, around 1910, his music shows the influence of the melodies, rhythms, and sonorities that he discovered. He began to compose prolifically, and, and though often ridiculed for his daring new style by other Brazilian musicians, he attracted the attention of the pianist Artur Rubinstein, who helped him receive a Brazilian government grant in 1923 that enabled him to spend several years in Paris, where his international reputation was established. Upon his permanent return to Rio de Janeiro in 1930, Villa-Lobos became an important figure in public musical education, urging the cultivation of Brazilian songs and dances in the schools. He made his first visit to the United States in 1944, and spent the remaining years of his life traveling in America and Europe to conduct and promote his own works and those of other Brazilian composers.

The Chôros No. 5 is from a series of 16 works by Villa-Lobos bearing that title which are scored for a varied instrumentation ranging from solo guitar to full orchestra combined with mixed chorus. The term derived from the popular bands of Rio de Janeiro that originated in the mid–19th century that freely mixed winds, guitars, and simple percussion instruments. Their repertory at first comprised polkas, waltzes, and other European imports, but later came to be associated with such characteristic Brazilian dances as the maxixe, tango brasileiro, and samba. Villa-Lobos believed that these bands epitomized Brazilian native music, and he attempted to capture their essence in his series of Chôros. “The Chôros,” he wrote, “represents a new form of musical composition in which are synthesized the different modalities of Brazilian, Indian, and popular music, having for principal elements Rhythm, and any typical Melody of popular character.”

The Chôros No. 5 of 1925, subtitled Alma Brasileira (“Brazilian Soul”), was dedicated to the industrialist and arts patron Arnaldo Guinle, who, two years later, helped to finance Villa-Lobos’s second stay in Paris. The composer wrote, “The most interesting aspects of the Chôros No. 5 are the irregular rhythm and melodic formulas, giving an impression of a rubato, or a melody with a ritardando. This seems to cause a slight delay or pause, which is exactly the practice of the seresteiros [street musicians]."

Ástor Piazzolla (1921–1992)

Oblivion

Composed in 1984.

The greatest master of the modern tango was Ástor Piazzolla, born in Mar Del Plata, Argentina, a resort town south of Buenos Aires, in 1921 and raised in New York City, where he lived with his father from 1924 to 1937. Before Ástor was ten years old, his musical talents had been discovered by Carlos Gardel, then the most famous of all performers and composers of tangos and a cultural hero in Argentina. At Gardel’s urging, the young Ástor returned to Buenos Aires in 1937 and joined the popular tango orchestra of Aníbal Troilo as arranger and bandoneón player. Piazzolla studied classical composition with Alberto Ginastera in Buenos Aires, and in 1954 he wrote a symphony for the Buenos Aires Philharmonic that earned him a scholarship to study in Paris with Nadia Boulanger. When Piazzolla returned to Buenos Aires in 1956, he founded his own performing group, and began to create a modern style for the tango that combined elements of traditional tango, Argentine folk music, and contemporary classical, jazz, and popular techniques into a “Nuevo Tango” that was as suitable for the concert hall as for the dance floor. Piazzolla toured widely, recorded frequently, and composed incessantly until he suffered a stroke in 1984.

Camargo Guarnieri (1907–1993)

Dansa Negra, from Three Dances

Composed in 1928.

Camargo Guarnieri—his father, a flutist born in Sicily and likely a descendent of the famous Cremona violin makers, gave him the middle name “Mozart,” which he thought too pretentious to use—was born in Tietê, Brazil, near São Paulo, on February 1, 1907. He studied piano, conducting, and composition at the São Paulo Conservatory and took over conducting duties for the newly established São Paulo Department of Culture in 1935 before accepting a government fellowship three years later to take courses in Paris with Nadia Boulanger. When Piazzolla returned to Buenos Aires in 1956, he founded his own performing group, and began to create a modern style for the tango that combined elements of traditional tango, Argentine folk music, and contemporary classical, jazz, and popular techniques into a “Nuevo Tango” that was as suitable for the concert hall as for the dance floor. Piazzolla toured widely, recorded frequently, and composed incessantly until he suffered a stroke in Paris in August 1990. He died in Buenos Aires on July 5, 1992.

In 1984, Piazzolla went to Rome to compose the score for director Marco Bellocchio’s screen version of Luigi Pirandello’s drama Enrico IV, starring Marcello Mastroianni and Claudia Cardinale. “The theme in Henry IV,” wrote John Humphreys Whitfield of the University of Birmingham, England, “is madness, which lies just under the skin of ordinary life and is, perhaps, superior to ordinary life in its construction of a satisfying reality. The play finds dramatic strength in its hero’s choice of retirement into unreality in preference to life in the uncertain world.” Bellocchio thought that Piazzolla found “a very strong point of contact” in the character of the King, which he captured in the deeply nostalgic number Oblivion written for the film.

Manuel de Falla (1876–1946)

Siete Canciones Populares Españolas, G. 40

Composed in 1914. Premiered on January 14, 1915, in Madrid by soprano Luisa Vela and the composer.

When Falla was preparing his opera La Vida Breve for its first Paris performance, at the Opéra Comique on December 30, 1913 (it had been premiered in Nice on April 1), he received two requests—one from the soprano Luisa Vela, who was performing the leading role of Salud in the cast of La Vida Breve, the other, from a Greek singing teacher. Vela was planning a series of recitals during the coming months, and she asked Falla to provide some songs in Spanish style for her programs; the Greek singing teacher wanted advice about the appropriate accompaniment style for some melodies from his homeland. Falla experimented with setting one of the Greek songs, and discovered that he could extrapolate a suitable harmonic idiom from the implications of the melody itself. He tried out this new technique in the songs he was preparing for Vela, which he had decided would be settings of seven popular indigenous melodies culled from various regions of Spain. The Siete Canciones Populares Españolas (“Seven Popular Spanish Songs”) were largely completed by the time he retreated to Spain in 1914 in the face of the German invasion of France; he and Vela gave their premiere at the Ateneo in Madrid on January 14, 1915. The idiom of the piano accompaniments that Falla devised for his Seven Popular Spanish Songs was, according to the composer’s biographer Suzanne Demarquez, derived from “the natural resonance…and modal nature of each song, without in any way neglecting the grace, the sensitivity, the delicate style of his pianistic inspiration.” Though the Siete Canciones Populares Españolas is virtually the only work of Falla to quote existing Spanish themes (two tiny folksong fragments were employed in The Three-Cornered Hat), so potent were these pieces in defining a national style of art song that Gilbert Chase said they provide “a model for contemporary song-writers throughout the Spanish-speaking world, in which popular and artistic elements are closely and often inextricably intertwined.”

El Paño Moruno (“The Moorish Cloth”), whose accompaniment was inspired by the steely brilliance of the guitar, comes from Murcia in southeastern Spain. Seguidilla Murciana, also from the province of Murcia, is a popular dance song in quick triple time. Asturiana is a lament from the northern region of Asturias. The Jota, mainly associated with the central province of Aragon, is one of the most familiar of Spanish dance forms. Nana is an Andalusian lullaby.

Canción (“Song”) exhibits the pattern of mixed rhythmic stresses that characterizes much of Spain’s indigenous music. Polo, Andalusian in origin, evokes the Gypsy world of flamenco. “For Falla,” wrote Gilbert Chase, “a folk song is not a simple tune to be arbitrarily adorned. Each folk song, he believes, conceals a deep musical meaning, a latent wealth of expression, that the arranger should endeavor to fathom and extract. Complex and difficult as are some of his accompaniments, they represent the re-creation on an artistic plane of the inherent me los of each song. Such a feat can only be accomplished when a great artist and a profound folklorist are found in the same person.”
When World War II erupted across Europe in 1939, Messiaen, then organist at Trinity Cathedral in Paris, a teacher at the École Normale de Musique and the Schola Cantorum, and a composer of rapidly growing reputation, was called up for service but deemed unfit for military duty because of his poor eyesight. He was instead first assigned as a furniture mover at Sarreguemines and then as a hospital attendant at Sarrabbe before ending up with a medical unit in Verdun, where he met Henri Akoka, a clarinettist with the Strasbourg Radio Orchestra, and Etienne Pasquier, cellist in an internationally renowned string trio with his brothers, violinist Jean and violinist Pierre. Inspired by the dawn bird songs that marked the end of his night watch at Verdun, Messiaen composed the Abyss of the Birds for solo clarinet, but even before Akoka could try it out, the Germans invaded France in May 1940, and all three musicians were captured the following month and sent to a prisoner-of-war camp—Stalag VIII A—at Görlitz, Silesia (now in Poland). At Stalag VIII A, they met the violinist Jean Le Boulaire, who had graduated from the Paris Conservatoire but spent much time at Thun (1886–1888) were equally productive: the Violin Sonatas Nos. 2 and 3, C minor Piano Trio, Second Cello Sonata, Gypsy Songs, Choral Songs (Op. 104), Lieder of Opp. 105–07, and Double Concerto were all written there. Brahms began the Third Violin Sonata, Op. 108, at Hofstetten during the summer of 1886, but composed most of the score during his sojourn two years later. The Sonata’s première was given on December 22, 1888, in Cologne by the composer and the celebrated Hungarian violinist, composer and pedagogue Jenő Hubay.

The D minor Sonata (performed on cello by Yo-Yo Ma) was dedicated to Hans von Bülow, a musician of gargantuan talent celebrated as both pianist and conductor, who played Brahms’s compositions widely and made them a mainstay in the repertory of the superb court orchestra at Meiningen during his tenure there as music director from 1880 to 1885. Cello and piano share equally the thematic material of the opening movement: the cello presents the principal subject, a lyrical inspiration marked by long notes that give way to quick neighboring tones; the piano’s arching second theme is superbly constructed from a two-measure motive of stepwise motion followed by a hesitant dotted-rhythm gesture. The development section is largely occupied with a discussion of the main theme. A full recapitulation and an ethereal coda grown from the main theme close the movement.

The Adagio is one of Brahms’s most endearing creations, an instrumental hymn of delicately dappled emotions, touching melody, and suave harmonies that caused Peter Latham to note in his biography of the composer, “Brahms wrote nothing more gracious than these Sonatas, in which he never seeks grandeur and woos rather than compels.” The third movement (which the score instructs should be played “con sentimento”) replaces the traditional scherzo with an intermezzo of precisely controlled intensity and masterful motivic development. The sonata-form finale resumes the darkly expressive eloquence of the opening movement with its petrifying main theme. A chordal subject initiated by the piano provides contrast, but the unsettling mood of the first theme remains dominant through the remainder of the movement.

Yo-Yo Ma’s multifaceted career is testament to his continual search for new ways to communicate with audiences, and to his personal desire for artistic growth and renewal. Whether performing new or familiar works from the cello repertoire, coming together with colleagues for chamber music, or exploring cultures and musical forms outside the Western classical tradition, Mr. Ma strives to find connections that stimulate the imagination.

Mr. Ma maintains a balance between his engagements as soloist with orchestras throughout the world and his recital and chamber music activities. He draws inspiration from a wide circle of collaborators, creating programs with such artists as Emanuel Ax, Daniel Barenboim, Christoph Eschenbach, Kayhan Kalhor, Ton Koopman, Bobby McFerrin, Edgar Meyer, Mark Morris, Riccardo Muti, Mark O’Connor, Kathryn Stott, Michael Tilson Thomas, Wu Man, Wu Tong, Damian Woetzel, and David Zinman. Each of these collaborations is fueled by the artists’ interactions, often extending the boundaries of a particular genre. One of Mr. Ma’s goals is the exploration of music as a means of communication, and as a vehicle for the migration of ideas, across a range of cultures throughout the world. To that end, he has taken time to immerse himself in subjects as diverse as native Chinese music with its distinctive instruments and the music of the Kalahari bush people in Africa.

Expanding upon this interest, in 1998 Mr. Ma established the Silk Road Project, a nonprofit arts and educational organization that takes its inspiration from the historic Silk Road trading routes as a modern metaphor for multicultural and interdisciplinary exchange. Under his artistic direction, the Silk Road Project presents performances by the acclaimed Silk Road Ensemble, engages in cross-cultural exchanges and residencies, leads workshops for students, and partners with leading cultural institutions to create educational materials and programs.

The Project’s ongoing affiliation with Harvard University has made it possible to broaden and enhance educational programming. Since the 2010–2011 school year, with ongoing partnerships with arts and educational organizations in New York City, it continues to expand Silk Road Connect, a multidisciplinary educational initiative for middle-school students in the city’s public schools. Developing new music is also a central undertaking of the Silk Road Project, which has been involved in commissioning and performing more than 60 new musical and multimedia works from composers and arrangers around the world. Through his work with the Silk Road Project, as throughout his career, Mr. Ma seeks to expand the cello repertoire, frequently performing lesser known music of the 20th century and commissions of new concertos and recital pieces. He has premiered works by a diverse group of composers, among them Stephen Albert, Elliott Carter, Chen Yi, Richard Danielpour, Osvaldo Golijov, John Harbison, Leon Kirchner, Peter Lieberson, Christopher Rouse, Bright Sheng, Tan Dun, John Williams, and Dmitry Yanov-Yanovsky.

As the Chicago Symphony Orchestra’s Judson and Joyce Green Creative Consultant, Mr. Ma is partnering with Maestro Riccardo Muti to provide collaborative musical leadership and guidance on innovative program development for the Institute for Learning, Access and Training at the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, and for Chicago Symphony artistic initiatives. Mr. Ma’s work focuses on the transformative power music can have in individuals’ lives, and on increasing the number and variety of opportunities audiences have to experience music in their communities. Mr. Ma and the Institute have created the Citizen Musician Initiative, a movement that calls on all musicians, music lovers, music teachers, and institutions to use the art form to bridge gulfs between people and to create and inspire a sense of community. Stories of Citizen Musician activity across the globe are featured at www.citizenmusician.org.

Mr. Ma is strongly committed to educational programs that not only bring young audiences into contact with music but also allow them to participate in its creation. While touring, he takes time whenever possible to conduct master classes as well as more informal programs for students—musicians and nonmusicians alike. At the same time, he continues to develop new concert programs for family audiences, for instance, helping to inaugurate the family series at Carnegie Hall. In each of these undertakings, he works to connect music to students’ daily surroundings and activities, with the goal of making music and creativity a vital part of children’s lives from an early age. He has also reached young audiences through appearances on Arthur, Mister Rogers’ Neighborhood, and Sesame Street.

Mr. Ma’s discography of over 75 albums (including more than 15 Grammy Award-winners) reflects his wide-ranging interests. He has made several successful recordings that defy categorization, among them Hush with Bobby McFerrin, Appalachia Waltz and Appalachian Journey with Mark O’Connor and Edgar Meyer, and two Grammy-winning tributes to the music of Brazil, Obrigado Brazil and Obrigado Brasil: Live in Concert. His recent collaborations with Edgar Meyer, Chris Thile, and Stuart Duncan resulted in The Goat Rodeo Sessions. Across this full range of releases, Mr. Ma remains one of the bestselling recording artists in the classical field. All of his recent albums have quickly entered the Billboard chart of classical bestsellers, remaining in the Top 15 for extended periods, often with as many as four titles simultaneously on the list. In fall 2009, Sony Classical released a box set of over 90 albums to commemorate Mr. Ma’s 30 years as a Sony recording artist.

Yo-Yo Ma was born in 1955 to Chinese parents living in Paris. He began to study the cello with his father at age four and soon came with his family to New York, where he spent most of his formative years. Later, his principal teacher was Leonard Rose at the Juilliard School. He sought out a traditional liberal arts education to expand upon his conservatory training, graduating from Harvard University in 1976. He has received numerous awards, including the Avery Fisher Prize (1978), the Glenn Gould Prize (1999), the National Medal of the Arts (2001), the Dan David Prize (2006), the Sonning Prize (2006), the World Economic Forum’s Crystal Award (2008), the Presidential Medal of Freedom (2010), the Kennedy Center Honors (2011), and most recently the Polar Music Prize (2012). Appointed a CultureConnect Ambassador by the United States Department of State in 2002, Mr. Ma has met with, trained, and mentored thousands of students worldwide, in countries including Lithuania, Korea, Lebanon, Azerbaijan, and China. Mr. Ma serves as a U.N. Messenger of Peace and as a member of the President’s Committee on the Arts and the Humanities. He has performed for eight American presidents, most recently at the inauguration of President Obama on the occasion of the 56th Inaugural Ceremony.

Mr. Ma and his wife have two children. He plays two instruments, a 1733 Montagnana cello from Venice and the 1712 Davidoff Stradivarius.

Kathryn Stott is recognized internationally as one of Britain’s most versatile and imaginative musicians and among today’s most engaging pianists. She is in demand for a wide variety of chamber music alliances, playing with some of the world’s leading instrumentalists, as well as appearing on major international concert platforms in recitals and concerto performances. She has also directed several distinctive concert series and festivals and has developed an extensive and exceptionally varied catalog of recordings.

Born in Lancashire, she studied at the Yehudi Menuhin School and the Royal College of Music and was a prize-winner at the Leeds International Piano Competition 1978. In addition to her busy career as a performer worldwide, she is a visiting professor at the Royal Academy of Music in London.

Ms. Stott enjoys associations with many orchestras and is a favored partner of many distinguished chamber musicians. She has been performing and recording with Yo-Yo Ma for nearly 30 years and future tours include visits to Australia, Switzerland, Italy, Norway, Holland, and Austria. She also enjoys teaming up with trumpeter Tine Thing Helseth for concerts and recordings and they will be touring the United Kingdom and Norway in 2013 to coincide with the release of their CD for EMI.

Kathryn (Kathy) Stott has a daughter, Lucy, and lives with her partner Huw, a landscape architect, in Hebden Bridge, England. In 2008, she celebrated her 50th birthday with 25 musician friends raising £30,000 for HIV research and Nordoff-Robbins Music Therapy, of whose fundraising committee she is a member. She also is on the Board of the Hallé Concerts Society. As her range of engagements and activities illustrates, Ms. Stott’s diverse career remains truly international as she continues to captivate audiences worldwide with her eloquent musicianship and outgoing personality.
