Vocalist and composer Cécile McLorin Salvant is much admired for beguiling projects that bring fresh perspectives to jazz performance through dramatic storytelling, vivid historical context, and daring original composition.

A MacArthur Fellow and three-time Grammy winner, Salvant is classically trained and steeped in jazz, blues, and Caribbean music, as well as Baroque repertoire and musical theater. And she's a musician who surrounds herself with many of the best and brightest artists on today's scene. Expect to hear selections from her September 2025 recording Oh Snap alongside an eclectic mix of standards from her repertoire.

Following the performance, UC Berkeley students in attendance are invited to a post-concert reception especially for them. Free light refreshments will be served on the Zellerbach Hall Mezzanine (second floor) for all student ticket holders and their guests.

Somi

Vocalist and composer Somi Kakoma, known simply as “Somi,” is a jazz artist for the globally connected times. The Midwestern daughter of parents who emigrated from Rwanda and Uganda, she found her musical voice traversing cultural bridges between Africa and the US, weaving Afropop, soul, and jazz into her body of work. The music on her latest release was composed in Lagos, Dakar, Paris, and New York, offering a musical travelogue that weaves deeply personal storytelling with modern jazz and African sensibilities.

Julia Keefe Indigenous Big Band

Musician and educator Julia Keefe makes her Cal Performances debut leading the Julia Keefe Indigenous Big Band, a group that celebrates and extends the contributions of Indigenous and Native musicians, composers, and bandleaders throughout the rich history of jazz. Artists like Russell “Big Chief” Moore, Mildred Bailey, Oscar Pettiford, and Jim Pepper ascended into the limelight as star performers, but many other players were never recognized. Audiences are likely to hear works from the 16-person ensemble's studio recording The Mildred Bailey Project that pays homage to Native American jazz vocalist Mildred Bailey who, in the 1930s, was the first woman to sing in front of a big band.

A close partner of the UC Berkeley campus, in 2025, Keefe gave a talk at the Arts Research Center speaking about her own career and highlighting the contributions of Indigenous people to jazz. A video of her presentation is available to stream on YouTube.

This is a Cal Performances Illuminations: “Exile & Sanctuary” event. Visit calperformances.org/illuminations to learn more.

Charlie Chaplain's The Kid

Marc Ribot, guitar

Film screening with live music

Iconoclast guitarist and fixture of New York’s downtown music scene, Marc Ribot lends his distinctive musical personality to an original live score for a special screening of Charlie Chaplin’s 1921 silent masterpiece, The Kid. Ribot’s bluesy avant-roots guitar playing is instantly recognizable as the sound of Tom Waits’ albums of the 1980s and ‘90s. In his own work, he has explored the legacy of free jazz hero Albert Ayler, Cuban bandleader Arsenio Rodríguez, and Haitian classical composer Frantz Casseus. Ribot channels all these influences as a counterpoint to Chaplin’s slapstick and sentimental story of an abandoned child and his adoptive father. Ribot’s score, commissioned and premiered in Jan 2010 by the NY Guitar Festival at Merkin Hall, was conceived as a contemporary reflection of economic hardship, partially inspired by the housing market crash of 2008.

Tickets: $74 (prices subject to change)
