FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE: December 22, 2006

THE POWER AND BEAUTY OF KODO ARE ON DISPLAY
FRIDAY–SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 2–4 AT ZELLERBACH HALL

BERKELEY, December 22, 2006—Combining the ancient art of Japanese drumming with a kaleidoscope of world music traditions, the acclaimed Kodo returns to Berkeley for three performances Friday and Saturday, February 4 and 5 at 8:00 p.m., and Sunday, February 6 at 3:00 p.m. “Indeed, if there is such a thing as perfection in music, Kodo comes as near to it as any group in the world” (The Boston Globe). The 16-member taiko troupe—taiko means drum in Japanese—includes dancers, singers and musicians, and a vast array of percussion instruments from hand cymbals to 800-pound behemoth o-daiko drums. While exploring the limitless possibilities of the Japanese drum, Kodo is forging new directions for a vibrant living art form. “What you see on the stage are traditional Japanese instruments,” explains Takeshi Akmine, Managing Director. “But what we express is often very contemporary...our younger performers have rock, jazz and even classical percussion experience...you can hear different tastes.”

The name Kodo comes from two Japanese characters for “child” and “play,” conveying Kodo’s desire to play with the “heart of a child.” Kodo is also a homonym for “heartbeat,” the most primal of all rhythms. The group began in 1981 as an off-shoot of another taiko group, Ondekoza, but is considered by many to be the fountainhead of taiko experience and wisdom. Under the artistic direction of Motofumi Yamaguchi, also the featured fue (flute), kokyū (Chinese fiddle), koto (Japanese floor harp) and shamisen (three-string lute) player with Kodo, the company lives communally on Sado Island, 40 miles west of the main Japanese island of Honshu, developing its own culture of living, learning and creating.

Physical conditioning is an important part of Kodo’s training with several of the older members having repeatedly run marathons. Yoshikazu Fujimoto, one of Kodo’s founding members and the most senior performer at 56, is not a big man but his physical prowess is in evidence when he plays the o-daiko costumed in a loincloth, his back rippling with muscles as the baseball bat-like clubs are swung overhead sending deep booms across the audience. Strength is needed not only to play the drums but also, since the company has no stage hands, everyone loads, unloads and sets up the instruments including the o-daiko drums that require eight people to lift and set into place.

In addition to the 40-plus company members, Kodo takes on apprentices. The highly competitive, two-year program includes rising each morning at 5 a.m. and running six miles, six days a week. Students learn traditional drumming, singing, drama and tea ceremony along with doing the farm work to raise the community's food.

Since Kodo's debut at the Berlin Festival over two decades ago, the troupe has given more than 2,600 performances on all five continents, touring up to eight months a year. While the company strives to both preserve and re-interpret traditional Japanese performing arts, touring and research trips around the world exert a strong influence on the group's work. Collaboration with artists across the musical spectrum includes jazz drummer and composer Max Roach, Indian tabla drummer Zakir Hussain, Grateful Dead drummer Mickey Hart and Brazilian percussionist Airtó Moreira. "The technique they use to play percussion instruments is totally different from anything I've ever seen" states Roach. "[T]hey deal with that 'visual sound' more than anyone I've ever known" (The Village Voice).
